CALL FOR PAPERS

FEU Institute of Technology (FEU Tech) invites paper presenters to the 5th International Conference in Technology (InCiTE) 2018 to be held on February 14 and 15, 2018, with the theme “Creating Resilient Communities Through Engineering and Technology.”

Resilient communities are able to adapt and recover quickly from adverse conditions. They have the capability to forecast hazards and identify areas at risks and the necessary infrastructure and resources to mitigate damages, respond to events, and recover quickly to resume normal functions.

Engineering and technological innovations play a huge role in constructing resilient communities. Advancements in both engineering and information technology allows the development of various technologies to improve capacities in mitigating risks and recover from natural disasters and events.

The International Conference in Technology and Engineering (InCiTE 2018) is inviting papers elucidating engineering and technology solutions in the following thematic areas:

Disaster Risk Reduction, Mitigation, Response and Recovery

- Technology solutions can enable communities to quickly bounce back from natural and man-made disasters. Research in this field includes robotics for hazard monitoring, structural design, alternative materials, education and others.

Food Security

- Communities that are self-reliant are in a better position to guard themselves from external events. Research in this area includes improving food security of the community through technologies that enable communities to improve their capacity to provide food, more efficient technologies to cultivate crops and crop monitoring systems.

Water Security

- Water is an important resource and it is imperative for communities to explore measures to protect and preserve the quality and quantity of their water supply. Research in this area includes emerging technologies in water treatment, monitoring and analysis of water.

Big Data

- Research in this area would allow communities to predict and plan for future events. This would allow them to develop insights on trends to find uses in seemingly disparate data. Included here are research on image analysis, and predictive analytics.
